This book analyzes e-participation in smart cities. In recent decades, information and communication technologies (ICT) have played a key role in the democratic political and governance process by allowing easier interaction between governments and citizens, and the increased ability of citizens to participate in the production chain of decision-making. The European Union, as a leader in this field, has developed various initiatives and frameworks to promote democracy and governance in the context of smart cities. This book presents an in-depth analysis of the European Union's approach to democracy promotion in South-Eastern Europe, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia, using the Normative Power Europe (NPE) framework of transnational policy formation. It brings together three scholarly domains that traditionally stand apart and are discussed separately. For more information, please visit the Springer website.
