Equity in Academic Publishing
Tips, tricks and traps to avoid for potential authors

Eva Szunyogová¹, Liam Messin², Brahm Marjadi³, Wendy Hu³

Introduction & Aims

Nurul has drafted her first research manuscript. She wants to publish in English for a global impact, but English is her fourth language. All the authors on the manuscript, including the department head who was indirectly involved in the research, are not fluent in English. Nurul receives an email from a new journal, inviting her to submit her work. The email promises free editing and fast processing for publication.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.

Many researchers encounter difficulty in publishing their work. Authors from low and middle-income countries may face additional challenges.

This poster aims to provide clear and concise guidance to authors hoping to submit research papers to the BMC Series.